

To professionalise or psychoanalyse?

Regulating Banking and Financial Services Culture – Roundtable

Regulators around the world are considering different regulatory models in an attempt to regulate culture. The Netherlands central bank implemented a psychoanalytical model of supervision of behaviour and culture in 2010. Australia, according to the Government's response to the Financial System Inquiry, appears to be moving in the direction of professionalisation.

This Roundtable brings together Australian and European regulators and international academics to discuss the strengths and weaknesses of models of regulation of culture in the banking and financial services industry. After a thorough examination of the proposals, the Roundtable will consider what is feasible in Australia. What other possibilities are there? What is to be done – should we professionalise or psychoanalyse?
